Dear Bob:

I sincerely appreciate your willingness to come down and help us with our program in International Relations here at the University. I am sure that you, in your position, appreciate the importance of bringing an awareness of world problems to the undergraduates in our colleges. I shall write in more detail later about your audience and specific arrangements. We hope to have five major talks during the course of this year and I should warn you that we may attempt to publish them between covers. These talks are geared to the basic International Studies course and students are held responsible for their content. I feel, therefore, that I should warn you that the level of sophistication of the audience will not be too high. I am sure, however, that you need not feel too cramped and that you will be able to give a meaningful interpretation of "The Long-Range Soviet Challenge".

There is just one further item on which I would like to trouble you. Would it be possible to switch our agreed date for your lecture from February 24th to March 3rd? If not, we will let the February 24th date stand and to save you the bother of having to write me a reply at the moment, can we leave it that if I don't hear from you March 3rd will be all right?

Best wishes,

Dick -

Incidentally, the picture arrived. We'll use it, but haven't you something glossier, darker and more reflective of your handsome self?

I'm sending along copies of last year's speaker announcements to give some idea of why we want a good picture.
